Spain's Tute has signed the lease for a new workplace co-working space in North Malbeco, with the organization's new values through intelligent design.

Malbeco-based social enterprise provider Tute has completed work on 'Our Community House', a new landmark co-working space located in North Malbeco, which is creating a stylish and sustainable example of what the future workplace can look like.

The space is home to a social enterprise that focuses on helping its clients achieve its goals through innovation, working design and data to amplify the work of some of Malbeco's leading social-ventured groups and initiatives.

Powered by a shared commitment of the firm's mission, intelligent thinking, the Tute Malbeco House will allow leadership to come closer to the group's mission, with a focus on co-working that is enabled by capabilities for both growth opportunities, government relationships and investment opportunities, and other features.

Including some of private offices, complete workstations and flexible seating, each of the buildings has co-working spaces designed to accommodate different disciplines in the operations of each space.

"It's a challenge to meet the needs of our design portfolio," says Tute's CEO, David Roberts. "We sought to create a space that provided a platform for the work for public sector to deliver and grow, and also improve how we create and maintain our services, digital and online."

With investments in the new public and enterprise operations, Tute has the ability to offer a new set of opportunities to businesses, from digital design to private equity investment, productivity and software in the cloud," adds Roberts.

As well as building community in Malbeco, social-ventured groups want more workplaces of the future, including private and public spaces, more private and public spaces, better living and working conditions, more of the same kind, a commitment to creating and maintaining services, as independently as possible, and to create a better future.
